Obligation of graduate students to register in researchmap, etc.

1. About researchmap

researchmap is a database-type researchers' directory operated by the Japan Science Foundation (JST), which aims to enable researchers to manage and disseminate their achievements. Researchers can create their own researcher sites with simple registration, and manage and disseminate their research achievements, including papers, lectures, oral presentations, books, industrial property rights, works (e.g. artworks), and social contribution activities. All functions are available free of charge.

In addition, it is basic information for a "researcher," so to speak, such as the ability to utilize various tools for research activities, including research communities, and to continue to use these tools even after completing graduate school and changing affiliations.

Okayama University considers graduate students, especially those in the doctoral (Ph.D.) program, as "researchers" rather than "students," and registration is considered a necessary activity for researchers.

We also believe that graduate students themselves should be prepared for this from their graduate student days, as it is often needed not only to promote their own research, but also in their post-completion careers.
